View on proposal to change advisory group terms of reference to provide for staggered membership

In our view adopting the practice of staggering the appointment terms of members of the advisory groups is a good idea. However, we believe that a term of up to three years would be more satisfactory than a term of up to two years as many of the projects the advisory groups are working on are long term. Three years would give an opportunity for members to continue to provide input into projects and to see projects through to completion during their terms.

Kind regards
